Painted Pipe

A resident beautifies a construction site....

"After putting my house up for sale in April, I worked very hard to get the yard looking its best. I knew the importance of curb appeal so was constantly removing any weeds that showed up on the street in front of my home. Weeds turned out to be the least of my problems!

Shortly after listing, the water and sewer construction on Turner Avenue started. I dreaded what was in store for my poor yard as the blasting, trenching, dust and machinery got closer.

Then one day I came home to find three huge blue water pipes lying right in front of my yard. I knew they were going to be there for a while as the work was still several blocks away. What to do with them? I decided that if I was stuck with them I might as well have some fun with them.

So under cover of dark, I painted the pipes in multi-colored flowers. Although they haven't helped to sell my house, they definitely became a neighborhood conversation piece."
